THE PACIFIC Commercial Advertiser.

In Memoriam.

BY ALBERT S. EVANS. One mournful wail is heard from shore to shore; A Namon's heart is stricken to the core; And FREEDOM, kneeling, with uncovered head, Weeps by the altar of OCR COUNTRY'S DEAD. Oh, God, who suffered this for purpose high! Teach us like him to Live, like him to DIE, True to the last to DUTY and to RIGHT. Trusting to Tues the issue of the fight. "Good night to thee, Hero, good night to thee, Sage !

Good night to thy form, but good morn to thy fame; Pass on with thy visor up, from age unto age : Not a sentry to challenge thy deeds or thy name." San Francisco, April 16th, 1865.

Remarks of Rev. Horatlo Stebbins on Death of President Lincoln.

The First Unitarian Church (San Francisco) was growded to its utmost capacity long before the hour for the commencement of the services, and one deep, all-prevailing feeling of sorrow, too deep for utterance, pervaded the whole vast audience. The remarks by Rev. Horatio Stebbins, which were listened to in silence, only broken by the sobs of many weepers, were as follows :

Parishioners, Friends and Citizens :- On the last Sanday morning we assembled here, according to consecrated habit, yet with special cause of grati-tude to Almighty God for the signal tokens of His providence in the victories of our arms. The rebel capital and stronghold had fallen, and while we were yet here in our places, though the fact had not reached us, the Army of Virginia with the Commander-in-Chief of all the rebel forces had capitulated to the Captain of our pursuing hosts. We brought in our banner and hung it here, that our loving eyes might linger on its beauty and our very prayers nestle in its folds. We raised our choral song of victory to Him who was, who is, and is to come; and when our service was ended we went out with reverent gladness and thanksgiving. But how changed now the aspect of our habitation ! These tokens of public sorrow, these symbols of grief, are indeed but feeble types of the nation's calamity. Weep, O ye daughters of the city, and bow yourselves ye strong men, for the agony of the land ! Ye choral company, sing no more exultant hallelujahs, but mournful misereri ! The President is dead! And, although death itself, as it comes in severe equality of lot to high and low, is not an evil, there are periods when the lives of men are exceeding precious upon the earth, and the wise and the good are made the depositories of the trusts of mankind. There are times in which a nation seems to lean upon a single man, and the life of a people is vested in him. History has eras of great anxiety, and mankind seem personified in an individual. The President was such a man in such a period. Placed by a free people, as the expression of their principles, in times of great public trial, he won their respect, their admiration and love. He seemed of us, and ours altogether; and we had entrusted all things to him. As it is the habit of the mind to live on that which it loves, we felt that we could not live without him. He was so American !

he was so human ! But the death of the President does not come to us ordains our lot, and hath mercifully appointed unto man once to die. A great crime has been committed -a crime which, whether in the dark, malignant process of its conception, or in the bold audacity of its execution, is without a parallel in deeds of darkness and blood. The President of the United States has been assassinated! On Friday evening last, at about ten o'clock, in Washington, that being about half past six o'clock in this longitude, while sitting with his family and friends in a place of public amusement and resort, he received a pistol shot, discharged by a treacherous, unknown hand, the perpetrator of the deed making his escape in the midst of the general consternation. The President survived, in a state of insensibility, until Saturday morning, when, at seven o'clock and twenty-two minutes, surrounded by his family and the members of his Cabinet, he died; and while the morning sun had not glanced his beams over the dwellings of men on this western shore of the Republic, the President

There are times when the mind itself refuses to perform the offices of intelligence, and the heart, congealed and dead, ceases to throb in sympathy with the agony it feels. The occasion oppresses me. I am not equal to it; and I relieve myself by the conviction that this is not the time, even were I able, to set forth in adequate display of human events, the nation's calamity, your grief, or the future of such portentous events. What we need at present, above all, is to preserve our minds in equanimity, sobriety and resignation. Our natural indignation at the dark deed struggles with our grief, and the fires of slumbering wrath flash against the troubled sky of our bereaved afflictions. But let us be calm, steady, determined and tender of heart. From our present information, it is not known to what extent this last act and article of the rebellion is the result of a wide and deeply-laid conspiracy, or whether it be only the insane rage of the individual perpetrators. The double assessination implies a plot involving a greater or less number of persons. But whether those persons are officially in league with the rebellion is not yet known. If they stand isolated in this dark wickedness and enterprise of blood, summary justice meted out to them, feeble as that must be to atone for such a crime, is all that we can do. But if it shall appear that this plot was laid at the rebel Capital, that it had in any way the moral support of the insurgent leaders, then let the lightning's wrath be unsheathed, to hurl the last vestige of their habitation from the earth. Let us wait time and events. Let every man stand firmly in his place, and talk calmly to his neighbor. If any man with low and reckless insolence dares insult our grief by asserting his sympathy with this wickedness, let him be taken by the delegated officers of society and cast into prison. But if any man, shocked by the dreadful enormity of this crime, is set free from his prejudices. and springs with loyal love to the cause he has hitherto opposed, accept his confession, and receive him I will not allow myself to think that even this dreadful event can permanently disturb our cause. That cause is bound to no man, however beloved and honored, but appeals again and again to the faithful hearts of the nation. And it may yet appear that it was meet that the President should die by the hands of wicked men, and that, being lifted up, he might draw all men unto him.

Let us indulge no evil forebodings. Let us believe in good, and act on our belief. There is much anxiety concerning the man on whom the President's mantle falls. He can only retrieve himself by noble efforts to redress the wrong he has committed against a generous people. Let us hope that he will do it; and let us remember that many noble natures have been enthralled by appetite, and have had their chains struck off by the sudden blows of new re-sponsibilities. But if that fails, let us come again and again to the rescue, remembering that our cause is not vested in any man.
